

Deep in the heartland, there are those kinds. The funny boys, them types of fellows that the entire town whispers about, but are they really so different from everybody else? There is the runaway teen who comes home after his abusive stepfather finally leaves his mother for good. Two cowboy lovers leave the farm hoping to find work in the gritty city but only find ornery people, rats, and no friends. There is an elderly gay man who lives in a nursing home, but he escapes and wanders the streets looking for his lost lover suffering from dementia. The diversity of these short stories runs the entire queer spectrum from the high camp of Magnolia Thunderpussy (Premier Drag Queen of Montana) to two creepy conjoined twins. There is even a bit of pulp fiction about two friends speeding across the country assaulting and robbing people and babbling in a drug psychosis crime spree. You might even find a postmodern religious debate going where the major religions fear to tread.
